

“And do you want to say,” asked Miss Resker, “that you have taught this cat, Tobermory, to say and understand words and short sentences?”

“My dear Miss Resker,” said the scientist, “one teaches little children in such a way. Tobermory is an animal of the highest intellect and he can speak our language as we do.”

«И вы хотите сказать, что научили этого кота, Тобермори, произносить и понимать слова и короткие фразы?» — спросила мисс Рескер.

«Именно так учат маленьких детей, моя дорогая мисс Рескер, — произнес ученый, — а Тобермори — животное высочайшего интеллекта и умеет говорить на нашем языке так же, как и мы с вами».

THE BOY AND THE DOOR

There was a small shop in a little street in an old town. In the shop were beautiful things made of silk, silver and gold¹. The small shop had a door that opened on the little street. The shopkeeper was standing at the open door.

“Come and buy! Come and buy!” called the shopkeeper.

“Come into my shop and see all the beautiful things!”

Again he called, “Come in! I shall show you beautiful things made of silk! I shall show you beautiful things made of silver and gold.”

One day the shopkeeper had to go away to the king's palace. The king wanted a beautiful silk coat and a silver cup from the shop. The shopkeeper called the boy who worked for him. "I'm going to the king's palace," he said. "You must stay here. Do not leave the door of the shop whatever happens¹. Do you understand?" "Yes, I understand," said the boy.

The shopkeeper went away and soon he came to the king's palace. He gave the king the silk coat and the silver cup. Then he went home. Soon he was back at the shop of beautiful things. He stopped and looked up in astonishment. "What is this?" he cried. "Why are so many people going into my shop?" Then the shopkeeper saw that the door of the shop was gone and so was the boy² who worked for him.

Just then the shopkeeper saw the boy. He was in the street near the shop. The boy had the shop door out in the street with him. He stood looking at some men who were doing tricks³.

The shopkeeper ran to the boy. "I told you not to leave my shop," he cried.

"No," said the boy. "You told me not to leave the door. I did just as you said. I did not leave the door. I have the door here with me."

THE FLYING¹ HORSE

(A fairy tale)

One day, when the King of Persia² was in his garden, an Indian³ came in bringing a horse with him. The Indian came up to the King and said, "Oh, King, if you look at this horse, you will see that there is no horse like it. It can do what no other horse can do. It can FLY."

The King of Persia loved to see new things, so he said to the Indian, "Get on the horse and I'll see what it can do."

The Indian did as he was told and asked, "Where shall I go? What shall I bring?" The King said, "Do you see that big hill over there? It is very far from here. There is a tree on the top⁴ of that hill and there is a red flower on the top of that tree. Go and bring me that flower."

¹ flying — летающий; to fly (flew) [flaɪ] ([flu:]) — летать

² Persia ['pɜ:ʃə] — Персия

³ Indian ['ɪndiən] — зд. индус

⁴ top — вершина

There was a little ring¹ on the horse's head. The Indian put his hand on the ring, and the horse flew up into the sky like a bird. Soon it was so far away that nobody could see it.

After an hour the King saw something in the sky very, very far away. Then he saw it was the Indian on his horse.

The horse came quickly down. The Indian got off the horse and gave the red flower to the King. The King was astonished. "Will you sell the horse to me?" he said. "What shall I give you for it?" "I'll sell it to you if you give me the Princess² to be my wife," answered the Indian.

The King's son, the Prince, was very angry when he heard this. "My father," he said, "will you give your child for a horse? That can never be!" But the King answered, "My son, you do not know what kind of a horse this is."

"The Prince may get on the horse and see how it flies," the Indian said.

Then the Prince got on the horse, he put his hand on the ring, and the horse flew up into the sky. They waited for some time, but the Prince didn't come back. The King asked the Indian, "Why doesn't the Prince come back?" The Indian was afraid and said, "Oh, King, the Prince went away so quickly, I had no time to tell him how to make the horse come down again. Do not be angry with me."

But the King was very angry.

"I'll tell my servants to shut you up³ in a small room; and if in a hundred days my son does not come back to me, they'll kill you."

Meanwhile⁴ the Prince went up and up into the sky. After an hour he thought it was time to go back home. He put his hand on the ring, but the horse did not go down. The Prince was afraid. He looked at the horse's body and at its head. Then he saw another little ring near the horse's ear¹. He put his hand on the ring and the horse went down and down.

It was night and the Prince couldn't see where the horse was going.

Soon the horse came down on the top of a very big house. The Prince got off the horse and walked to this side and then to that side and he could not see how to get down from the top of the house. At last he saw a little door. He opened it, and saw a room. There was a bed in the room all made of gold². A very beautiful girl lay sleeping in it. The Prince came up to the bed, put his hand on the girl's arm and saw that she opened her eyes. The Prince said, "I am a prince, the son of the King of Persia. I don't know where I am, I don't know what country this is."

The beautiful girl was the daughter of the King of Bengal³. "Do not be afraid," she said to the Prince, "just tell me how you have come from Persia to Bengal. But first you must have something to eat." She called her servants and they gave him new clothes and brought in supper.

When supper was over, the Prince told the Princess everything that had happened to him⁴.

For many days the Prince of Persia lived in the Princess's house.

One day the Prince said, "I must go back to Persia, I am afraid if I do not come, my father will think I am dead. Come with me on the Flying Horse, I shall ask my father's permission⁵ to marry you." And the Princess said, "I'll come."

³ Bengal [beŋ'gɔ:l] — Бенгалия

⁴ that had happened to him — что произошло с ним (до этого момента)

⁵ permission [pə'mɪʃ(ə)n] — разрешение

² Princess [ˈprɪn'ses] — принцесса; Prince [prɪns] — принц

³ to shut you up — запереть тебя

⁴ Meanwhile [ˈmi:nwaɪl] — Тем временем

Everybody was asleep when the Prince and the Princess went on to the top of the house and got up on the horse. The horse flew up and in two hours they were over the town of the King of Persia.

The Prince had a palace not far from the town. He made the horse go down to that house. The Princess stayed in it, and the Prince went to his father, the King. The King sat in his room crying because people had told him his son was dead. When he saw the Prince alive, he was so happy, that he didn't know what to do. The Prince told him his story and then said, "I want to marry the Princess of Bengal, I've brought her with me, she is in my house." "Bring her to me," said the King, "and she will marry you here in my house."

Then everybody was happy. So the King told his men to bring the Indian to him. When the Indian was brought in, the King said, "My son has come home, you may take your horse and go."

But the Indian was very angry with the King and decided to revenge himself¹. The people in the street told him all about the Princess of Bengal and he went straight to the house where she was. "The King of Persia has sent me to bring the Princess of Bengal to him on the Flying Horse," he said. The servants knew the Indian and so they let him put the Princess on the horse.

The Indian got on the horse and made it go up into the sky.

The King and his son saw the Indian and the Princess on the horse. The horse went up and up, it flew away, and soon they could see it no more.

The Flying Horse went over rivers and hills, over towns and seas and at last came to the country of Cashmere². Soon the Indian wanted to eat, so he brought the horse down near a forest. "Sit down here, at the foot of the big tree," he said to the Princess, "and I'll go and get some food." He went away. The Princess began to shout, "Save¹ me! Oh, save me from this man!" The King of Cashmere was in the forest at that time. He heard the cries and went quickly to see what the matter was.

When he came up to the Princess, she explained everything to him. "I am the Princess of Bengal," she said, "I was going to marry the Prince of Persia, but this Indian took me away from Persia and brought me to this place." The King of Cashmere was so angry that he told his servants to kill the Indian and invited the Princess to his palace in the town. The Princess was very happy. She thought, "The King of Cashmere is a kind-hearted man, I am sure, he will send me back to Persia."

But the King of Cashmere was not a good man. He said to his servants, "Walk about the town and tell everybody — the King of Cashmere is going to marry the Princess of Bengal."

When the Princess knew this, she thought and thought, and she made a plan. She decided to make everybody think that she was very ill. When the King came to her the next day, she was in bed and her eyes were closed. She didn't say anything and looked more dead than alive. The King of Cashmere decided to wait for some days. But she didn't recover². Then the King sent for all his wizards³. He asked them to make the Princess well again, but nobody could do anything to help the Princess. She stayed in bed and her eyes were closed.

Meanwhile the Prince of Persia went from country to country, from town to town looking for the Princess. When

2 Answer the questions.

- 1) Why did the King of Persia let the Indian show him the horse?
- 2) What did the King want the Indian to bring him?

he reached the country of Cashmere, he heard people talk about the Princess of Bengal. Here is what one said. "Have you heard the news? The Princess of Bengal, whom our King was going to marry, is dying. She is very ill and nobody can do anything to help her."

Then the Prince made up a plan. He got the clothes of a wizard, put them on and went to the King's palace. "I can help everybody who is ill," said he, "I've heard that the Princess of Bengal is ill. I am sure I'll help her to recover."

The King of Cashmere took him to the Princess's bedroom. When he saw her lying in bed with her eyes closed, he went near to her and said something in her ear. He said, "I am the Prince of Persia, go on being ill¹, I shall save you." And then he said loudly, "She will not die if you do what I say. Where is the horse she came on? Tell your servants to bring it to a field, and make a big fire²."

So a big fire was made in the field, and the horse was brought and put near the fire. Then the Prince of Persia told the servants to bring the Princess. They brought her and she stood near the horse.

The King and his men were on one side of the fire standing far away because it was very hot. The Prince, the Princess and the horse were on the other side.

The Prince quickly put the Princess on the horse; he got up on it and put his hand on the ring. The moment he did it the horse flew up into the sky and took them away.

Soon they came back to Persia and next day they were married. They loved each other and lived happily ever after³.

WHEN I AM ILL

When I am ill, I go to bed
And on the pillow¹ lay² my head.
The doctor comes and says, "Dear me!³
Whatever can the matter be?⁴"

He feels my pulse⁵ and sees my tongue;
He tests my heart and then each lung⁶;
He asks how old I am, and then
He takes his paper and his pen.

And makes a note of things that taste
So horrid⁷, that I'm sure it's waste
To take them⁸. But he says, "Each noon⁹
Take this, and you'll be better soon."

THE DOVE AND THE ANT¹

(A fable)

On a hot day in June an ant went to a river to drink, but fell into the water and was going to drown². A dove who was sitting in a tree quite near³, saw this. She threw a leaf down into the water. The ant saw it, got on it and came out of the water. He was very happy and said, "Thank you very much for your kindness. I won't forget it."

Some days after that the ant saw a man getting ready to shoot⁴ the dove. The ant ran up and stung⁵ the man on the foot. He was just in time, because the sting made the man jump when he was going to shoot, and he did not shoot straight. And so the dove had time to fly away⁶. She thanked the ant for his kind and clever action⁷.

Exercises

THE RATS AND THEIR DAUGHTER

(A fairy tale)

Once upon a time¹ there were two Rats, who had many fine children; but (the one) they loved most was their youngest daughter. She was a nice little Rat. She had the most beautiful grey coat, and the brightest little eyes, and such dear little ears! And her parents thought that she was the most beautiful rat in the world.

When she was old enough to marry, they began to think of her future husband.

¹ Once upon [əˈrʌn] a time — Некогда, давным-давно (обычное начало сказки)

"She must have a very mighty¹ husband," they said. "No one but² the mightiest in the world shall marry our beautiful daughter." But who was the mightiest? It was not easy to tell, and they didn't know. So they went to a very old and clever rat, and asked him. His answer was: "If you wish to give your daughter to the mightiest of all, then go to the Sun, and ask him to be your daughter's husband. I am sure no one is mightier than the Sun."

So Mr. and Mrs. Rat went to the Sun (and it was a very long way) and asked him to marry their daughter. But the Sun answered, "It is very nice of you to come all this way and ask me to marry your dear daughter, but please tell me, why did you choose³ me?"

"We chose you, because we wish to give her to the mightiest in the whole world; and, of course, no one can be mightier than you."

"I see," said the Sun, "but I'm afraid it is not true, there is one mightier than I am, and you must give your daughter to him."

"Who can be mightier than you?" asked Mr. Rat, and the Sun answered, "When I wish to shine on the earth, a Cloud often comes along, and my light cannot pass through it or drive it away⁴. You must go to the Cloud."

So Mr. and Mrs. Rat went to the Cloud and told him their wish.

"I am not the mightiest," said the Cloud." The Wind is mightier than I. When the Wind blows⁵, he drives me along and I can do nothing against him."

So Mr. and Mrs. Rat went to the Wind.

² no one but — никто кроме

³ to choose [tʃu:z] (chose [tʃəʊz]) — выбирать

⁴ my light cannot pass through [θru:] it or drive it away — мой луч не может проникнуть сквозь него или прогнать его прочь

⁵ to blow [bləʊ] — дуть

But the Wind said, "Yes, I am mightier than the Cloud. But I am not the mightiest in the world; the Wall is sometimes in my way, and I blow and blow, but the Wall is still¹ there and I cannot pass through it."

Again Mr. and Mrs. Rat went on², till they came to the Wall. But the Wall said, "You are right. I am mightier than the Wind. But there is the Rat, who makes holes in me — and I can do nothing against him. The best thing for you to do³ is to choose the Rat for your daughter's husband."

Then Mr. and Mrs. Rat were happy, because they saw that the Wall was right. They came back home and their beautiful daughter married the Rat; and they lived happily for many, many years. Who knows? Perhaps they are still alive.

THE DAYS OF THE WEEK

You know the names of the days of the week: Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday. But do you know where these names come from? If you look carefully at the word Sunday, you may guess that it comes from Sun-day, the day of the Sun. The name of the second day, Monday, comes from the word Moon; so Monday is the day of the Moon. The names of the other days of the week are connected¹ with the names of different gods² and planets. For example,³ the word Thursday comes from the name of the god Thor⁴. Thor was the German god of thunder⁵, and even now you can sometimes meet the word Thunderday which is the other name for Thursday. The word Friday comes from the name of the old German goddess Frig⁶ who was the goddess of beauty.

² gods — боги

³ For example [fə'ɪɡ'zɑ:m(p)əl] — Например

⁵ thunder ['θʌndə] — гром

⁶ goddess Frig ['gɒdɪs'frɪɡ] — богиня Фриг

The last day of the week is Saturday. The first part of this word, Saturn¹, is Latin². It is the name of the god and the planet. The second part of the word is English. So Saturday is the day of Saturn.

TWO STORIES ABOUT FAITHFUL¹ DOGS

I

More than three hundred years ago, the brave Prince of Orange was at the head of the Dutch army in a war with the Spanish King². One night, as the Prince and his guards lay asleep, six hundred Spanish soldiers broke into their camp. The Prince's little dog heard them. "What can I do to help my master?" said the dog to himself. The dog thought of a good plan. He began scratching³ his master's hand to awake⁴ him. But the Prince was sleeping. "Why doesn't he awake?" the dog thought. He scratched his master's hand again. The Prince awoke, jumped on his horse, and called to his soldiers. You may be sure that the Prince did not forget his clever little dog. If you go to Holland⁵ today, you may see a statue⁶ showing the Prince with his faithful dog at his feet.

II

Prince Llevellyn⁷ had a favourite dog named Gellert, kind at home and brave in fight. One day the Prince was ready to go hunting⁸ and called for his dogs. All the dogs came, but Gellert was absent. The Prince called and called, but Gellert did not come. He could not wait any longer¹ and went off without his favourite.

As the Prince came back, Gellert came running out to meet him. But the Prince saw blood² on his mouth and legs. The Prince was frightened.³ He thought of his little son who often played with the dog. He ran into the child's room. Everything was in disorder. The little bed was turned over and all in blood. Where was the child? He looked for the baby but could not find it. Now he was sure that his son was dead. With the cry "You have eaten my child!" he put his sword⁴ into the dog's body.

At that moment a cry was heard from under the bed, and there Llevellyn found his child alive, and the body of a great wolf all in blood lay near him.

Llevellyn was in despair⁵ but nothing could bring his brave dog to life again.

He buried him in his garden and put many stones over the grave⁶ so that every passer-by⁷ might see it and remember the dog's story. And to this day the place is called The Grave of Gellert.

THE STORY OF ABUL QASIM (An old legend)

Many, many years ago there was a merchant, named Abul Qasim¹. He was the richest man in the country, but he spent no more money than the poorest man in the town. He ate only dates² and bread and wore his clothes³ for ten years. He had not bought new shoes for thirty years. When there was a hole in one of his shoes, he took it to a shoemaker and said, "Put a piece of new leather¹ over the old one, but don't cut the old leather away, I once paid money for it." So Abul Qasim's shoes became the largest in the town. People laughed and said, "Look! Here comes Abul Qasim, half Abul Qasim and half shoes!"

One of Abul Qasim's friends did not like it. He went to a shop and bought the best pair of shoes he could find. Then, one day, he followed Abul Qasim to the mosque². Abul Qasim left his shoes at the door and went in. Then his friend took away the large and heavy old shoes, and put the new shoes down in their place.

When Abul Qasim came out of the mosque, he could not find his shoes. He was angry. "Somebody has stolen³ my shoes," he thought. When everybody had left the mosque, the new shoes were still at the door. So Abul Qasim put them on and found that they fitted him very well.⁴ "A careless man has taken my shoes by mistake⁵," he thought, "and has left his shoes in their place." As Abul Qasim walked home, he was unhappy. "These shoes are too good for the street," he thought.

When Abul Qasim's friend walked away from the mosque, he did not know what to do with the old shoes. He saw a poor man and offered him⁶ the shoes. "Thank you," the man said, "but my shoes are better than those." So the friend walked on and came to the high garden wall of a house. He threw the shoes over the wall and went home.

The shoes fell in the yard of the house. In the evening the merchant who lived in this house found the shoes. This merchant, like everybody in the town, knew that these were the shoes of Abul Qasim. He went to Abul Qasim's house, and found him at his door. He shouted at Abul Qasim and they began to fight. But the people in the street cried, "Don't fight! To the judge¹, to the judge!"

So the two men were taken to the judge. "This man must be punished,²" said the merchant, "he was trying to get into my house. But he saw me and ran away. He ran off so quickly that he had to leave his shoes in my yard." He showed the shoes to the judge.

Then Abul Qasim told his story. But the judge did not believe³ him. So the judge said that Abul Qasim must be punished with fifty strokes of the whip⁴. Then the soldiers tied Abul Qasim's hands and gave him fifty strokes of the whip. The merchant threw the old shoes at Abul Qasim and said, "Take your shoes and be careful in future."

Abul Qasim was very unhappy when he returned home. He decided to throw the old shoes away. He went to the rubbish pit⁵ outside the town and threw the old shoes into the pit. "Now they can bring me no more misfortune⁶," he said. He returned home, lay down on his bed, and slept. But he had a dog, and this dog always ran to the rubbish pit looking for food, because Abul Qasim never bought food for his dog. The dog saw the shoes in the pit and knew they were its master's. So the dog took one of the shoes in its mouth and went home with it, and left it by Abul Qasim's bed. Then he ran back to the pit and brought the other shoe in the same way.

When Abul Qasim opened his eyes and saw the shoes by his bed, he was frightened. "These shoes can walk," he thought. "They want to bring me a new misfortune." So he made a large fire¹ in the yard of his house and put the shoes in it. It was a windy day and in a minute the house caught fire. Soon a lot of people ran into Abul Qasim's yard. "A fire, a fire!" they shouted. But they could do nothing. So Abul Qasim's house was burnt down². But his old shoes were saved³ from fire. Abul Qasim was greatly astonished when he saw them. "They will bring me a new misfortune," he thought. He wished more than ever to get rid of⁴ his shoes. He went to a very clever old man and asked him how he could get rid of them. The old man said, "As you can't throw them away, and can't burn them, you had better bury them."

At that time two very rich merchants from another country were staying in the town. As they were afraid of thieves⁵, they buried their money in a hole in the ground outside the town. A thief saw it. When the merchants went away, he took their money from the hole. The next day Abul Qasim took the shoes and left the town looking for a place to bury them in. He came to that same hole and buried his shoes in it. Then he returned home with hope in his heart. "They will bring me no misfortune now," he thought. "I have at last got rid of them."

When the two merchants came for their money, they found only the old shoes. There was nothing else in the hole.

They took the shoes and went to the judge. "We left our money in a hole in the ground," they said. "A thief has taken it. In its place he has left his shoes."

The judge was astonished when he saw the shoes. "I know these shoes," he said, "and I know the thief." He told his soldiers to bring Abul Qasim to him. Abul Qasim was brought before the judge, and he saw his shoes there. The judge said to him, "Abul Qasim, first you tried to get into a merchant's house to steal. Now you have stolen the money of these two men. You are a thief and you must be punished again. Your right hand must be cut off. Then everybody will know what kind of man you are." The soldiers again tied Abul Qasim up and cut off his right hand.

Abul Qasim sat in his yard. His house had been burnt down. His right hand had been cut off. "I must leave this country," he thought. "If I stay here, these shoes will again bring me misfortune. I can't get rid of them." So he left the old shoes in his yard and went away. He went by boat but the wind overturned the boat. With only one hand Abul Qasim could not swim well, so he drowned¹.

The next day some men found Abul Qasim's body and wanted to bury him. They said, "Where is the hand that was cut off? We cannot bury a man without his hand." Somebody answered, "Why do you ask about his hand? Abul Qasim never used that hand to give money to the poor. Ask for his shoes. The shoes were really a part of Abul Qasim. Who ever saw him without them? They grew larger as he grew larger."

So they went to the yard of Abul Qasim's house and there they found his old shoes. They put them on his feet, and as they carried² his body along the streets of the town and people asked, "Who is it you are burying?", they answered, "We are burying half Abul Qasim and half shoes."

THE TRAVELLER AND THE LION¹

A traveller in South Africa² once went on a long journey. When he was very far from home, he saw a lion at a distance³. The lion saw him at the same time, and began to follow him. When the traveller walked fast⁴, the lion walked fast! When he stopped, the lion stopped! The man saw that the lion was going to follow him till dark and then jump at him.

He could not run away from the lion, as the lion could run faster than he. So he thought of a plan to cheat⁵ the lion. He came to a high rock and hid⁶ behind it, so that the lion could not see him. Then taking a stick which he found among the rocks, he put his coat and his hat on it, so as to make them look like a man. Then he put out the stick above⁷ the rock behind which he was hidden. Soon the lion came to the rock. He saw the coat and the hat and he made a sudden jump at them. He jumped straight over the place, where the man lay and, falling down among rocks, was killed!

The traveller was saved¹ and very soon he got home.

PLAYING BASKET-BALL

The basket-ball players came to the coach¹ to practice². "Boys," said the coach, "tomorrow you'll have a game. You pass³ and throw the ball very badly. Now you must practice good and quick passing. Do not throw the ball into the basket now. That's all." He went away and the players began their game.

They ran up and down the room passing the ball to one another. Many times when they came near the basket, they wished to throw the ball into it, but stopped, remembering the coach's words. An hour passed. The coach who watched the work of his players was pleased⁴. "Five minutes more," he shouted.

How quickly the ball was caught by one player and how well thrown to another player! But see! Suddenly the ball rose in the air and fell into the basket. The boys stopped. "John," said the coach, "you will not play here. You may go out."

After two hours of hard work, practice was stopped. The boys came to the dressing-room. John was there. "Ah," said he laughing. "What fun is there in only passing the ball?⁵ Why can't we throw the ball into the basket if we want to? The coach is a tyrant¹. Let's all leave him and play without him. Then we can throw the ball as we like."

His friends did not know what to think. But Nick said, "Oh, John, you remind me of a fox without a tail². Do you know that story, boys? I'll tell it to you."

"A fox lost his tail in a trap³ and was ashamed to appear in the world without it. So he said to the other foxes, 'You must cut off your tails. They are so long and so useless. You cannot imagine with what pleasure I walk now, when I have cut off my tail. You will see I'm right if you do the same.' But an old clever fox answered, 'I am sure, my friend, you give us this advice⁴ only because you have lost your tail.'"

When the boys heard the story, they all laughed heartily at John, and he went away ashamed.

DO YOU KNOW WHY IT IS SO?

A month is about the time taken by the Moon to go once round the Earth. The Moon really takes twenty-nine and a half days to go round the Earth. So the moon-months are not the same as our months. But most people just divide the year (365 days) into twelve parts:

$$\begin{array}{r} 365 \overline{) 12} \\ \underline{360} \\ 5 \end{array}$$

There are five days left, or in a leap-year (366 days) there are six days left.

So, we ought to have¹ in leap-years six months of thirty days each and six months of thirty one days each.

Months	What we ought to have	What we really have
January	31	31
February	30(29)	29(28)
March	31	31
April	30	30
May	31	31
June	30	30
July	31	31
August	30	31
September	31	30
October	30	31
November	31	30
December	30	31

Why don't we have the calendar which we ought to have?

At first the calendar was very much the same as the one we have shown. But then it was changed. Why? We'll tell you the reason¹. It was a very silly² reason.

The names of the months were taken from the Roman³ names. It was Julius Caesar, the Roman ruler⁴, who divided the year into six months of thirty one days and six of thirty. Every other month had thirty days just as we have shown it. The fifth month was named by Julius Caesar after himself⁵. And so it has his name, July, even now. You see, July is the same as Juli-us — Julius' month.

Now the Roman ruler who came after Caesar, was called Augustus⁶. He said, "One of the months is named after Julius, why is there no month named after me? The fifth month is named after him, so I'll have the sixth month named after me." So the sixth month was called August after Augustus. (They had been called⁷ just the fifth and the sixth month before.)

Then Augustus saw that Julius' month had thirty one days, and his month only thirty. So he took a day from February and put it into his month August. So, February got 28—29 days and August thirty-one. Then the number of days in September, October, November and December was changed, so as to try to get the 30—31 arrangement right again⁸. That was how Augustus undid⁹ all the nice, simple¹⁰ arrangements of Julius Caesar.

A DUMB¹ WIFE (A joke)

Once there was a man whose wife was dumb and this made him very sad² because he loved her very much. After a time he went to a doctor and said, "Can you make my wife speak?"

"Perhaps I can," said the doctor, "the operation³ is difficult, but if I may try, I'll do my best⁴."

"Of course you may try," said the husband, "I'll bring her tomorrow."

The next day the doctor made the operation and the dumb wife began to speak. She spoke so much and so loudly⁵ that in a few hours her poor husband ran back to the doctor and said:

"Can you make my wife dumb again?"

"No," said the doctor, "there are many ways to make a dumb woman speak but not one to make a woman stop talking."

"What must I do?" said the man. "I shall soon die if I have to listen to her all day long." "Well," said the doctor, "I can't make her dumb, but I can make you deaf¹ and then you will not have to listen to her."

"Very well," said the man, "you may do so. It will be better than the other way."

WAT TYLOR¹

Richard the Second became the King of England in 1377, when he was only eleven years old. At that time everybody who was older than fifteen had to pay one shilling² to the King. The poor had to pay as much as the rich. This made the poor of England rebel³. A blacksmith⁴, Wat Tylor, was at their head. The rebels, and they were 50 thousand people, came to London, destroyed the houses of the rich and killed everybody who looked like a lord⁵. The rebels wanted to speak to the King. On the 15th of June, 1381, the rebels and the King met, and Wat Tylor spoke so bravely to the King, that one of the lords, who was present at the meeting, killed Tylor with his sword⁶. Seeing the death of their leader⁷, the rebels wanted to kill the lords but the young King said to them, "I myself will be your leader. Let me know your troubles⁸ and I'll do everything I can to help you." The rebels believed⁹ the King's

GARETH AND LINETTE¹ (An English Legend)

Long ago there lived in England a great King called King Arthur². King Arthur had a round table at which one hundred and fifty knights³ could sit. These knights of the Round Table helped the King in all things and they also helped everybody who came to the King asking for help. It was a great honour⁴

² King Arthur ['ɑ:θə] — король Артур (легендарный король Англии, первый среди равных рыцарей Круглого стола)

³ knight [naɪt] — рыцарь

⁴ honour ['ɒnə] — честь

to be a knight of King Arthur and only the bravest and truest knights could sit at the famous Round Table.

Gareth was the son of King Lot. One day he stood near his mother's chair and said, "Oh, Mother, I am no longer¹ a child. Will you help me to become one of King Arthur's knights?" She answered, "Before I could ask for this honour for you I must be sure that you'll love the King and obey² him. Do you really know how to obey?" "Yes, Mother. What shall I do?" "You must go to King Arthur's palace dressed as a poor man, looking for somebody who wishes to get a servant. You must become a servant in the kitchen of the palace and stay there among other servants for twelve months," his mother answered.

The next day Gareth got up in the morning and dressed as a servant. Soon he was making his way to King Arthur's palace. When afternoon came, he got to the King's palace and went in. Many people were waiting for their turn³ to speak to the King. When Gareth's turn came, he said, "Oh, King, I have a very easy thing to ask: let me work among the servants in your kitchen for one year." The King looked at him and said, "You are a fine young man, why don't you ask for something more? But as that's all you want, you'll be in charge of Sir Kay⁴ — he has charge of the kitchen⁵."

So Gareth became a servant in the kitchen. He ate by the door and slept among the servants. But Sir Kay who had charge of the kitchen did not like Gareth. He charged him with more work⁶ than anybody else, and he gave him the dirtiest tasks. But Gareth obeyed without a word.

⁴ in charge of Sir Kay [ɪn tʃɑ:dʒ əv sɜ: keɪ] — в распоряжении сэра Кея

⁵ he has charge of the kitchen — ему поручено следить за кухней

⁶ to charge with work — нагружать работой

When just one year passed, King Arthur sent for Gareth and said, "Gareth, your mother has told me about you. You wish to become one of my knights. Remember that my knights have hard trials¹ and have to make hard promises². They promise to obey me in everything."

"Oh, King," Gareth answered, "only ask Sir Kay how I have obeyed him this long year. And only give me a trial."

"You shall have a trial," said the King.

That evening there came into the palace a young lady. The lady was so beautiful that everybody looked at her in astonishment.

"My name," said the young lady, "is Linette. I've come to ask you to send your bravest knight to help me. My sister Lyonor is held a prisoner³ by four great knights. Their names are Morning Star, Noon Sun⁴ and Evening Star. But the fourth who guards the gates is the greatest of all. His name is Night."

Then Gareth cried, "Oh, King, let me go and help the lady."

"Go then," said King Arthur.

The young lady looked at Gareth. She saw him as a servant of the kitchen. For a moment she turned her look on King Arthur. "Then you must be ashamed," she cried. "I asked for the bravest knight and you have given me a kitchen lad⁵." And she ran out of the room. Just then a servant boy came up to Gareth and said, "The king has sent a horse and armour⁶ for you."

⁴ Noon Sun — полуденное солнце

⁵ lad — парень

⁶ armour ['ɑ:mə] — доспехи

Gareth put on his armour and said good-bye to King Arthur and the knights. A few minutes later he left the palace. And all the servants waved him good luck¹ from the walls of the palace.

Gareth rode² after the lady. She was angry and decided to be very rude³ to him. So she did not answer him when he spoke.

"You may be as rude as you like," said Gareth, "but I have decided to give your sister freedom." The lady turned back and said, "Kitchen lad, you smell of cooking⁴. My sister does not ask her freedom of such servants as you."

"But I've decided to do the task," answered Gareth.

At last they came to the bank of a river. It was a bright early morning, every leaf and flower was wet with dew⁵. There was a bridge over the river and on the other side of it under a tree there stood a great red tent. A very big man was sitting before the tent. It was Morning Star. He saw Gareth and Linette and cried, "Is this the knight whom you brought from Arthur's palace to fight me?" "No," answered Lady Linette, "King Arthur thinks so little of you and your three brothers that he has sent a lad from his kitchen against you."

"Ladies of the Morning Star, give me my armour!" cried the knight. There came out of the tent three beautiful girls. The girls quickly dressed the knight in blue armour and gave him a blue shield⁶ with a picture of the Morning Star on it.

Lady Linette looked at Gareth. "Hadn't you better run away?" she asked. "I am sure kitchen lads are not very good at fighting." "I had better fight against a hundred such knights than to hear your rude words, my lady," said Gareth.

The fight began and soon the Morning Star lay on the ground. "Do not take my life," cried the knight. "Pardon¹ me." "I'll give you pardon," answered Gareth, "if this lady asks me to pardon you." "Rude man," cried the lady. "Why shall I ask you?"

"Then he must die," said Gareth.

"Then pardon him. ... I ask for it of you."

"I'll pardon him," said Gareth, "it is my greatest pleasure to do all that you say." They rode on.² "When you made me ask for the knight's life of you," said Lady Linette, "the smell of the kitchen became much stronger³."

It was afternoon. The hot afternoon sun shone high in a cloudless sky. At last they came to the second river which had so little water that there was not even a bridge over it. On the other side of the river on a big red horse sat Noon Sun. His bright armour shone in the sun. There was a picture of the hot noon sun on his shield. He shouted, "Who are you? What are you doing here?" Lady Linette answered, "This is a kitchen lad from King Arthur's palace. He has conquered⁴ your brother and he hopes to do the same to you." "No," cried the knight. "He hopes much!"

They fought in the river. Gareth's fourth stroke⁵ sent Noon Sun and his horse down into the water.

"It was not your stroke which threw him down⁶," said Lady Linette. "His horse fell under him." Gareth was tired of the lady's rude words and he made no answer.

⁵ stroke — удар; to strike (struck) — ударять

⁶ It was not your stroke that hit him down — Это не твой удар сбил его

They rode on and when evening came, they saw a large river and a body of a very big man on a horse. He was sitting so still you could think it was a lifeless thing cut of stone. The knight Evening Star thought that Gareth was his brother and said: "Ho, Noon Sun, why have you left your place?" "This is not your brother," answered Lady Linette. "This is a lad who has come from King Arthur's palace and has conquered your two brothers."

"Give me my armour," cried the Evening Star, "and I'll fight him." A very old woman came out of an old tent and gave him the armour. There was a picture of the Evening Star on his shield.

The fight began. Evening Star was a very brave knight. After a time Gareth became tired. Then Linette cried out, "Strike hard! Strike harder! His armour is old. He is tired too." That helped Gareth. He struck Evening Star with his sword¹ and as their swords met, Evening's sword was broken. Then Gareth took the knight round his body, raised him from the ground and threw him from the bridge down on the river stone.

"Ride on!" said Gareth to Linette. "And I'll go after you. Show me where the fourth knight is." "No," answered Linette. "You must ride at my side. You are a very true knight and I am sorry that I have spoken so rudely to you. I ask you to forgive me." "Really, lady! You must not be sorry," said Gareth. "Let's see the fourth knight, the last and the worst of all." "Night is really the worst of the four," said Linette, "let us first rest and eat before you go to this worst trial of all."

The moon rose up into the sky as they started again. "There is his palace," said Lady Linette pointing to a high dark tower². They came nearer. The gate of the palace was closed. In front of it a black tent stood. Near the door of the tent was a very big horn³. And beside it was written: "He who wishes to die must blow⁴ this horn."

² pointing to a high dark tower [ˈtaʊə] — указывая на высокий темный замок

³ horn — рог

⁴ to blow (blew) — зд. трубить

Gareth took the horn and blew it. A sound like thunder¹ came out into the night air and something very big and black appeared. It was Night. He rode on a black horse, black as night, and his armour was also black as night. A picture of a dead man was seen on his black shield. He had no face and in its place there were big white teeth² and big eyes which saw nothing. He went up without a word. "Fool!"³ cried Gareth. "They say you are very strong. Then why do you make people afraid with these foolish things?" Night did not say a word. Gareth struck him on the head with his sword and the Night's armour broke into two pieces. A very young and bright face of a boy appeared out of it. "Oh, knight," the boy said almost crying, "forgive me. Pardon me! Do not take my life. My brothers made me do it so that⁴ nobody could come to the palace. They wanted to make everybody afraid of me."

Linette was happy. And Gareth was happy too. They went to the palace and gave Lady Lyonor freedom. Then Gareth went back to King Arthur and became his knight. Some people, who tell this story, say that Gareth married Lady Lyonor. But others say that he married Lady Linette.

AN IRISHMAN AND A PRIEST¹ (A joke)

An Irishman who never went to church² met the village priest one morning.

“Good morning, son of the Devil³,” said the priest.

“Good morning, Father,” was the Irishman’s answer.

“Father,” he continued, “last night I had a dream⁴.”

² church [tʃɜ:tʃ] — церковь

³ Devil [ˈdeɪvl] — дьявол

⁴ dream — сон; to dream — видеть во сне

“I don’t want to hear about your dreams,” answered the other.

“But, Father, I dreamed about you.”

“Really?! Then tell me all about it!”

“I dreamed that I was dead and that I was going to Heaven¹.”

“To Heaven? You will never go to Heaven.”

“But I dreamed I was going to Heaven, Father. I saw a very long staircase² at the foot of which stood an angel³. The angel gave me a very big piece of chalk and told me to make a cross⁴ on every step of the staircase for every sin⁵ that I had in my heart. I began making crosses as I went. I was going up and up the staircase. When I made very many crosses, I saw a man coming down the staircase and to my astonishment it was you, Father.”

“And what was I doing there? Why was I coming down?”

“That is what I asked you, Father. And you answered, ‘To get more chalk’.”

- 10) The priest wanted more chalk because he had many sins.

WHERE DO THE WORDS COME FROM?

Every day new things appear in our life. Where do we get the words to name them?

Sometimes we use old words in a new meaning¹. For example² the verb to write comes from the verb which many centuries ago meant to scratch (царапать).

Sometimes the first meaning of the word does not disappear³ and we can see its development⁴. Let us take the word board for example. You know its first meaning доска. Then it developed into стол. But when the French word table came into the English language, the word board lost this meaning and came to mean food, as you can see in the expression⁵ bed and board — квартира и стол. The Russian word стол has

² for example [fɔːr ɪgˈzɑːmp(ə)l] — например

³ disappear [ˈdɪsəˈpiə] — исчезать

⁴ development [dɪˈveləpmənt] — развитие; to develop — развиваться

⁵ expression [ɪkˈspreʃ(ə)n] — выражение

this meaning too. Then it developed into the meaning совет, правление — that is a table round which people meet for some kind of business¹.

You know the expression to be on board the ship, which means to be on the ship. One can also board a train, a tram or a plane², which means to take a train, a tram or a plane. To be on the boards means to be an actor, to play on the stage³, which is made of boards.

Very often people take the new word from another language. School, money, number, cook and many other Latin words came into Old English more than 1500 years ago. It shows that people who lived then in Britain learned from the Romans⁴ how to teach their children at schools, how to use money, how to cook food and many other things.

A few years ago the word sputnik⁵ was used only by the Russians, because it is a Russian word. On October 4, 1957, the first Soviet Sputnik was launched⁶ and a new word was introduced⁷ into English and into many other languages.

SIXPENCE¹

After K. Mansfield

"Dicky, come here! Come here, sir, at once²! Do you hear your mother calling you? Dicky!"

But Dicky did not want to come. Oh, he heard his mother all right. A ringing little laugh was his answer. He ran away; as his sisters called it, Dicky suddenly went "mad dog."³

It began at tea-time. Dicky's mother and Mrs. Spears were sitting⁴ in the room sewing. The children were eating⁵ their bread and butter in their room, and the servant girl was just going to give them the milk, when Dicky suddenly took the bread plate, put it on his head and took the bread knife.

"Look at me!" he shouted. His sisters looked and before the servant girl could get there, the bread plate went to the floor and broke into little pieces. Then the girls started crying, "Mother, come and look what he has done! Dicky has broken a big plate! Come and stop him, Mother!"

You can imagine how Mother came running. But she was too late. Dicky had got out of the chair, run out of the room to the garden and, well,— there she stood calling him, helpless. What could she do? She could not run after the child. She could not look for the boy among the apple-trees. And then Mrs. Spears, who was waiting⁶ for her in the room, Mrs. Spears, whose two boys were so exemplary⁷! It was just awful⁸.

"Very well, Dicky," she cried, "I shall have to think of some way of punishing you!"

"I don't care²," came the high little voice with that ringing laugh again. What could she do? She went back to Mrs. Spears.

"Oh, Mrs. Spears, I am so sorry. I had to leave you for some time."

"It's all right, dear," said Mrs. Spears, "these little things happen in family life. May I ask you what the matter was?"

"It was Dicky," said Mrs. Bendall, looking helplessly for her needle. And she explained the whole matter to Mrs. Spears. "And I don't know what to do with him." Mrs. Spears opened her eyes. "Did you try a whipping³?" she said.

"No," said Mrs. Bendall. "We have never whipped the children. And Dicky is so little."

"Oh, my dear," said Mrs. Spears, and she put her needle-work down. "I am sure you are not right. Whipping is very useful. Nothing really takes its place. Well, my two boys, and you know, they are exemplary now, were bad too. I tried different ways: I tried to make them stand on the table for the whole Saturday afternoon or to soap their tongues with yellow soap⁴, but there is nothing like whipping. I always ask their father to do it."

"Their father?" said Mrs. Bendall. "Then it is not you who does it?"

"Never," said Mrs. Spears angrily, "I don't think it's the mother's duty⁵ to whip the children. It is the duty of the father. It is much better."

"Yes, I can imagine that," said Mrs. Bendall, "I shall speak to Edward the moment he comes in."

When the children went to bed, Dicky's father returned home. He was hot and tired after his working day. Mrs. Bendall opened the door.

"Why, Edward! I am so glad you have come home."

"Oh, what has happened?" Edward took off his hat.

"Come in," said Mrs. Bendall quickly. "I just can't tell you how bad Dicky has been. You have no idea what a child of six can do. He has been awful. I've tried everything but it's all useless. You must whip him, Edward, that's what you must do."

"But why have I to start whipping the boy? We've never done it before," said Edward.

"Because—," said his wife, "don't you see? I can do nothing with him. You don't understand, Edward, you can't. You are not at home all day long." Edward almost fell into the chair.

"What must I whip him with?" he said weakly¹.

"Your slipper², of course," said his wife.

Edward was awfully tired. He could not think. "All right, give me that slipper," he said. He got up and went to Dicky's room. He opened the door and came in. Dicky was standing in the middle of the room in his night-shirt.

"Well, Dicky," said the father, "You know what I've come for?" Dicky didn't answer.

"I've come to give you a whipping."

No answer.

"Take off your night-shirt."

At that Dicky looked up. His face became red.

"Must I?" he said in a low voice.

² slipper ['slipə] — комнатная туфля

"Now, be quick about it," said Edward and taking the slipper he gave Dicky three hard slaps¹. "Well, that'll teach you a lesson." Dicky stood there with his head down. "Get into bed," said his father. But Dicky stood still. Then he looked up. His lips were quivering² but his eyes were dry.

"I have not washed my face, daddy³."

But looking at this little face, Edward turned and ran out of the room straight into the garden. "What have I done?" he thought. "I have whipped Dicky, whipped my little man with a slipper. And what for? I don't even know. And my boy didn't even cry. He called me "daddy", he forgave me without a word. But I'll never forgive myself." And he ran back to the house. The little boy was in bed. Even now he wasn't crying. Edward closed the door. He didn't know what to do.

"Not asleep yet, Dicky?" asked he.

"No, daddy."

Edward came over and sat down on his boy's bed.

"Nothing the matter, little man, is there?⁴" said Edward in a very low voice.

"No, daddy," came from Dicky. Edward carefully took Dicky's hot little hand.

"You, you mustn't think of what happened just now, little man," he said. "See? That's all over now. That's forgotten. That's never going to happen again. See?⁵"

"Yes, daddy."

"Now you must forget all about it and smile, eh? Little man... Old boy..."

And he tried to smile himself. Dicky lay as before. This was awful. Dicky's father got up and went over to the window.

² His lips were quivering — ['kwiv(ə)riŋ] — Его губы дрожали

³ daddy ['dædi] — папочка

⁴ Nothing the matter, little man, is there? — Ничего не случилось, малыш, не правда ли?

⁵ That's never going to happen again. See? — Это никогда больше не случится. Понимаешь?

It was almost dark in the garden. But in the dark sky the evening star shone. The father stood looking at the star and at the leaves of the big black tree. He put his hand into his pocket and found some money there. Bringing it out, he chose a new sixpence and went back to Dicky.

“That’s for you, little man. Buy something,” said Edward putting the sixpence on the bed.

But could even that — could his words and the sixpence— blot out what had been¹?

WAYLAND THE SMITH¹

After R. Kipling

Wayland, the smith, was a god². He was brought to England by some pirates³ many hundred years ago. He was a very energetic⁴ god and people all over the country believed⁵ in him. But they did not love him. They were afraid of him. He was sure he was the master of the people and all the time asked them to give him men, women and horses as a sacrifice⁶. But a time came when people didn't want to give him anything more. So Wayland had no food. As he was too proud to beg and he was also too honest to steal⁷, he worked, he became a smith.

Many gods had been brought⁸ to England. For a time they became the people's favourites, but then as they got out of date⁹, they left the country for Valhalla¹⁰. Wayland wished

³ pirate — пират

⁴ energetic [ˈenəˈdʒetɪk] — энергичный

⁵ to believe [biˈli:v] — верить

⁶ sacrifice [ˈsækrɪfaɪs] — жертва

⁷ too proud to beg... too honest to steal [ˈɒnɪst] [sti:l] — слишком горд, чтобы просить... слишком честен, чтобы красть

⁸ had been brought — были раньше привезены

⁹ to get out of date — выходить из моды

¹⁰ Valhalla [vælˈhælə] — Валгалла (жилище богов по германской мифологии)

to leave too, but as he was very proud, he was not allowed to go away to Valhalla. The other gods said, "You'll come and live with us only if some man or woman truly wishes you well¹." But nobody did.

So Wayland, the smith, had to shoe² people's horses. Nobody ever saw him at work; you see, even now, living in the world, he didn't like to appear in the village. Men brought their horses to some place, where they tied them up, and went away, leaving their money there for the smith. When they returned for their horses, they found them shod but they never saw Wayland, the smith.

One day a farmer brought his horse to the smith, put a penny³ on the stone, tied his horse to a tree and called out: "Smith, smith, here is work for you!" Then he sat down and fell asleep. Wayland shod his horse quickly and when the farmer woke up⁴, he took his horse and rode away⁵ without one word of thanks.

A little English fairy Puck⁶, the oldest of all the old things of that old country, got very angry when he knew about it, and he decided to teach the farmer a lesson.

So he made the farmer lose his way. He made the horse go uphill and downhill, round the hill and back again. The whole night Puck's game continued and the farmer thought his horse was bewitched⁷. In the early morning a young man met the farmer and asked him what the matter was. When he heard the farmer's story, he was angry, as angry as Puck was, and he said, "Come back to the smith and thank him or you'll be sorry!"

¹ truly wishes you well — искренно пожелает тебе добра

² to shoe [ʃu:] (shod, shod) — подковывать

³ penny [ˈpeni] — пенс (мелкая английская монета)

⁴ to wake (woke) up — проснуться

⁵ to ride (rode) away — ускакать

⁶ fairy Puck [ˈfe(ə)pi ˈrʌk] — волшебник Пак

⁷ bewitched [biˈwɪtʃt] — заколдованный

At first the farmer did not want to do so, but the young man was shaking him like a rat¹ till he went back and did as he was told.

Then the young man cried, "Ho! Smith of the Gods, I am ashamed of this farmer. But for everything you have done to him and to others of our people I thank you and truly wish you well!"

Wayland was free! He could go away to Valhalla because a man had wished him well. He laughed and he cried with joy². But he was honest, very honest. He wanted to thank the young man. So he made a wonderful sword³, brought it to the young man and put it by his side in the night. Then he went away to Valhalla and since that time never appeared in England again.

TWO STORIES ABOUT CLEVER BOYS

I

It happened many, many years ago in a small village. There was a very large jar full of water¹, standing in front of a house. One day some children were playing by the side of this jar. One of the children climbed² on the jar and looked in. Suddenly he fell into the jar! What could the children do? How could they save the child? Nobody had any idea what to do. Then a clever child brought a large stone and threw it at the jar. The jar broke, the water ran out and the child was saved¹.

² to climb [klaɪm] — влезать

II

A long, long time ago a man with an elephant² came to a village. This was the first time the people of the village saw such a big animal, and they wanted to know what the weight³ of the elephant was. But each of them had different ideas about it. Everybody said that he was right and the others were wrong⁴.

They tried to think of a plan by which they could know how much the elephant weighed. But they could not find any because they had no scales⁵ large enough to weigh such a big animal.

Then a little boy said, "I have a plan to find out how much it weighs; please let me try it."

They laughed at him. They could not imagine that a little child could find a plan when they, old people, couldn't do so; but they decided to let him try.

The child first told them to put the elephant in a big boat. The weight of the animal, of course, made the boat sink⁶ a little way in the water. The boy then made a mark⁷ on the side of the boat where the water reached⁸. Then he told them to take the elephant out of the boat, and the boat went up again.

After that, he collected some large stones and told the people to put them in the boat one by one. The boat began to sink again till at last the water came up to the mark on the side. This showed that the stones in the boat were of the same weight as the weight of the elephant.

² elephant ['elɪfənt] — слон

³ weight [weɪt] — вес; to weigh [weɪ] — взвешивать; весить

⁴ were wrong [rɒŋ] — были неправы

⁵ scales [skeɪlz] — весы

⁶ to sink — погрузиться (в воду)

⁷ mark — отметка

⁸ to reach [ri:tʃ] — достигать

It was then very easy to weigh the stones one by one and when these weights were added⁸ together, the people knew what the weight of the elephant was.

Exercises

Answer the questions.

a)

- 1) Where and when did the event described in the story take place?
- 2) Where did the children play?
- 3) What did one of the children do?
- 4) What happened to the boy?
- 5) Was it possible to save him?
- 6) How was the child saved?

b)

- 1) Did the people of the village see an elephant before?
- 2) Did it happen in India?
- 3) What did the people want to know?
- 4) Why couldn't they weigh the elephant?
- 5) Did the people believe that a little boy could think of a plan how to weigh the elephant?
- 6) What did the boy tell them to do first?
- 7) What did the boy do when the elephant was put in a big boat?
- 8) What did the boy tell the people to put into the boat?
- 9) In what way did the people know the weight of the elephant?
- 10) Do you think that the boy knew physics? What law of physics did he use?

⁸ to add — складывать (в арифметике)

THE LAST WORD OF A BLUEBIRD¹

Robert Frost

As I went out a Crow²
In a low voice said, "Oh,
I was looking for you.
How do you do?
I just came to tell you
To tell Lesley, will you³?
That her little Bluebird
Wanted me to bring word
That the north wind last night
That made the stars bright
And made ice on the trough⁴
Almost made him cough
His tail feathers off⁵.
He just had to fly⁶!
But he sent her Good-bye,
And said to be good,
And wear⁷ her red hood⁸,
And look for skunk⁹ tracks¹⁰

² crow [krəʊ] — ворона

³ to tell Lesley, will you — зд. передайте, пожалуйста, Лесли (имя девочки)

⁴ trough [trɒf] — жолоб

⁵ almost made him cough [kɒf] his tail feathers [ˈfeðəz] off — заставил его так кашлять, что у него чуть не вылетели все перья из хвоста

⁶ to fly — зд. улететь

⁷ to wear [weə] — носить

⁸ hood — зд. шапочка

⁹ skunk — хорек

¹⁰ track — след

In the snow with an ax¹
And do everything!
And perhaps in the spring
He would come back and sing².”

What were the last words of the Bluebird? Do you think Lesley will miss her little Bluebird?

TOBERMORY³

After Saki (H. Munro)

It was a cold afternoon of a late August day. Mrs. Blemley's guests⁴ were sitting⁵ at the tea-table. They were all listening to Mr. Appin who said he was going to show them the most important and interesting experiment⁶ in the world's science.

“And do you really ask us to believe⁷ that you have found a way to teach animals to speak as people do and that our cat, dear old Tobermory, is your first and best pupil?”

² would [wʊd] come back and sing — вернется и будет петь

³ Tobermory — Тобермори (кличка кота)

⁴ Mrs. Blemley's [ˈmɪsɪz ˈblemlɪz] guests [gests] — гости миссис Блемли

⁵ were sitting — сидели (эта грамматическая форма выражает действие, которое длилось в какой-то определенный промежуток времени; см. далее: were listening, was giving — слушали, давал)

⁶ experiment [ɪkˈsperɪmənt] — эксперимент

⁷ to believe [bɪˈli:v] — поверить

“It is a problem at which I have been working for¹ the last seventeen years,” said Mr. Appin. “Of course, I have experimented with thousands of animals, but the last two years only with cats, who are the cleverest. Here and there among cats, one finds the highest intellect² just as one does³ among the people, and when I met Tobermory a week ago, I saw at once what kind of a cat he was, and my experiments have shown that I was right: with Tobermory, as you call him, I have reached the goal⁴.”

“And do you want to say,” asked Miss Resker, “that you have taught Tobermory to say and understand words and short sentences?”

“My dear Miss Resker,” said the scientist, “one teaches little children in such a way. Tobermory is an animal of the highest intellect and he can speak our language as we do.”

Nobody believed it, but, being polite, didn't say anything.

“Hadn't we better have the cat in and see for ourselves?⁵” at last said Mrs. Blemley. Her husband went to look for the animal.

In a minute Mr. Blemley was back in the room. “Oh, it is true,” he cried out. “I found him in a bedroom and called out to him to come for his tea. He looked at me as he always does and I said, ‘Come on, Toby, don't keep us waiting⁶!’ and can you imagine? — he answered in the most natural voice — ‘I will come when I like.’” Nobody believed Mr. Blemley. A hot discussion arose when suddenly Tobermory came in.

¹ I have been working for... — Я работал в течение...

² one finds the highest intellect [ˈɪntɪlekt] — можно найти высочайший интеллект

³ just as one does — точно так как

⁴ I have reached the goal [gəʊl] — я достиг цели

⁵ Hadn't we better have the cat in and see for ourselves [ʌvəˈselvz]? — Не лучше ли позвать кота в комнату и самим убедиться в этом?

⁶ don't keep us waiting — не заставляй нас ждать

"Will you have some milk, Tobermory," asked Mrs. Blemley in a sugary voice. "I think I will," was a cold answer. Mrs. Blemley's hand trembled¹ when she was giving Tobermory milk. Nobody could say a word. At last Miss Resker asked, "Was it very difficult to learn the language of people?" Tobermory looked straight at her for a moment and then turned away and looked at the wall. Everybody saw he was not going to answer silly² questions.

"May I ask you what you think of people's intellect?" asked one of the ladies.

"Of whose intellect do you want to know, of a man's or of a woman's?"

"Oh, well, I want to know of my intellect."

"It is very difficult to answer your question," said Tobermory, whose voice showed it was never difficult for him to say anything. "Yesterday, when Mr. and Mrs. Blemley discussed whom to invite to the party, Mr. Blemley said about you, 'We had better not invite this lady, as she is the silliest woman in the world.' But Mrs. Blemley answered, 'That's just why³ I am going to invite her. I hope she is silly enough to buy⁴ our old car which is so old and bad that nobody will ever buy it.'"

Mrs. Blemley blushed⁵ and tried to say something but could not: only five or six hours ago she had told⁶ the lady how nice their old car was. Mr. Blemley tried to change the conversation. He turned to the cat. "Is your dinner ready, Toby? Perhaps you'll go and see."

"Thank you," answered the cat, "I've just had my milk. I do not want to die of too much eating."

² silly [ˈsɪli] — глупый, пустяковый

³ That's just why — Вот почему

⁴ she is silly enough to buy — она достаточно глупа, чтобы купить

⁵ to blush — вспыхнуть (о лице)

⁶ had told — сказала

"Oh, cats have nine lives you know," said Mr. Blemley heartily.

"May be," answered Tobermory, "but only one liver¹."

"Dear," said one of the guests, "are you going to let that cat go out and speak about us in the kitchen?"

The panic became general.² The cat could know their secrets³! He could tell everything to everybody! Some guests ran out of the room, some were thinking of a present for Tobermory — may be a nice little mouse — to make him silent⁴.

"Oh, why did I come here?" cried out Miss Resker.

Tobermory was ready to give an answer. "You came here because you wanted to have a good dinner. You said to your friend today, 'The Blemleys are the dullest⁵ people, I know, but they are clever enough to have a good cook in their house.' And your friend repeated your words to another lady and said, 'That woman is always hungry⁶. She is ready to go anywhere⁷ to get a plate of soup and a piece of meat.' And that lady said..."

But at that moment Tobermory saw his enemy⁸, a big red cat, Tom, from the next house, and ran out of the room.

When he was gone, the guests asked Mr. Appin, "Can Tobermory teach the other cats to speak?" And they were very glad to hear that Toby could not do so. Then Mrs. Blemley began to speak, "My husband and I like Tobermory very much, but now, of course, we have only one way out⁹. We must make him silent and if it cannot be done, well, then..." "We can put some poison¹⁰ into his food at dinner-time!" said Mr. Blemley.

² The panic became general [ˈdʒenrəl]. — Поднялась всеобщая паника.

³ secret [ˈsi:krit] — тайна, секрет

⁴ to make him silent — чтобы заставить его молчать

⁵ dull — скучный

⁶ hungry [ˈhʌŋɡri] — голодный

⁷ to go anywhere — пойти куда угодно

⁸ enemy [ˈenəmi] — враг

⁹ way out — выход

¹⁰ poison [ˈpɔɪz(ə)n] — яд

“But what about science!” cried Mr. Appin. “After all my years of experiments!”

“You can go and make your experiments on the elephants at the Zoo¹. They are clever and they don’t come to our rooms, they don’t lie under our chairs. And they don’t listen to our conversations.”

When dinner-time came, the guests sat down at the table but spoke very little. Miss Resker took just a little piece of bread and looked at the meat as if it were² her enemy. Everybody was looking at the door, waiting for Tobermory. They waited for a long time, but the cat never came. Late at night Mr. Blemley said, “He won’t come. I’m afraid he has gone to the newspaper office³. His article⁴ will appear tomorrow, I’m sure.”

In the morning a gardener found the cat on the flowerbed. Tobermory was dead. It was seen that he had fallen in the fight with his enemy, the big red Tom from the next house. Some time later an elephant in the Zoo suddenly killed an Englishman. The name of the Englishman appeared in the newspapers — it was Appin.

Checking Comprehension

1 Say who:

- 1) was going to show the guests his experiment.
- 2) said that cats were the cleverest animals.

² as if it were — как будто оно было

³ newspaper office [ˈɒfɪs] — редакция газеты

⁴ article [ˈɑːtɪk(ə)l] — статья

- 3) said that they had better see for themselves.
- 4) asked Tobermory if he wanted some milk.
- 5) asked Tobermory what he thought of people’s intellect.
- 6) told the guests about Mr. and Mrs. Blemley’s conversation.
- 7) said that cats had nine lives.
- 8) asked Mr. Appin if Tobermory could teach the other cats to speak.
- 9) said that they must make Tobermory silent.
- 10) said that he was afraid that Tobermory had gone to the newspaper office.
- 11) killed an Englishman.
- 12) was killed by an elephant.

2 Say what you have learnt about:

- Mr. Appin
- Tobermory
- Mr. and Mrs. Blemley
- Tom

Working with Vocabulary and Grammar

1 Say what the italicized words mean.

- 9) Tobermory died.
- 10) an elephant in the Zoo killed Mr. Appin.

2 Make up and act out a conversation between Mr. Appin and the guests.

3 Imagine that you are:

1) one of the guests. Say:

- a) whether you believed Mr. Appin.
- b) what you felt when the cat began to speak.
- c) why you were afraid that the cat would speak about you.

2) Tobermory. Say:

- a) whether you liked to learn to speak
- b) whether you liked Mr. Appin.
- c) what you thought of your masters.
- d) why the guests wanted to make you silent.

3) Mr. Blemley. Say:

- a) whether you were glad that your cat could speak.
- b) why your wife wanted to invite one of the ladies.
- c) what Miss Resker said about you and your wife.
- d) whether you were sorry for Tobermory.

A PAIR OF TROUSERS¹

Once a young man went to town and bought a pair of trousers. When he got home, he went upstairs² to his bedroom and put them on. He found that they were about two inches³ too long.

He went downstairs, where his mother and two sisters were washing up the tea-things⁴ in the kitchen.

² upstairs ['ʌp'steəz] — вверх по лестнице; downstairs — вниз по лестнице

³ inch [ɪntʃ] — дюйм (2,5 см)

⁴ were washing up the tea-things — мыли чайную посуду

“These new trousers are too long,” he said. “They need shortening¹ by two inches. Will one of you do this for me, please?” His mother and sisters were busy and nobody of them said anything.

When his mother finished washing up, she went upstairs to her son's bedroom and made the trousers shorter by two inches. Then she came downstairs but didn't say anything to her daughters.

After supper one of the sisters remembered her brother's trousers. She was a kind-hearted girl, so she went upstairs, shortened the trousers by two inches and did not say anything to anybody.

The other sister went to the cinema, but when she came back, she, too, remembered her brother's words. So she ran upstairs with her scissors, needle and thread and took two inches off the legs of the new trousers.

You can imagine the young man's face when he put the trousers on the next morning.

Exercises

1 Say whether the statements are true or false. Correct the false ones.

- 1) The trousers were too short for the young man.
- 2) The young man decided to shorten the trousers.
- 3) His mother told him that she would do it.
- 4) His mother and his sisters shortened the trousers by two inches each.
- 5) The trousers were shortened by two inches.
- 6) The trousers became too short.
- 7) The young man thanked his mother and his sisters.

¹ They need shortening ['ʃɔ:tnɪŋ] — Их нужно укоротить; to shorten — укорачивать

2 Translate the sentences paying attention to the pronouns.

- 1) She said nothing to anybody.
- 2) She didn't say anything to anybody.
- 3) Look! There is somebody in the room.
- 4) Is there anybody here?
- 5) Go and buy something for supper, please.
- 6) Is there anything interesting on the TV today?
- 7) Are you hungry? Do you want something to eat?
- 8) — What shall I give you to eat? — Give me anything. I'm hungry.

RIDDLES

1) When is the best time to study the book of nature¹?
(When autumn turns leaves.)

2) Name the word of five letters, from which if you take two letters, only one is left².

(„Stone“)

3) What grows larger when you take from it?

(A hole)

Exercises

1 Guess the Riddles.

2 Translate them into Russian.

A TRUE STORY

In the autumn of 1935, when I was a young man, I was travelling in the North-West of India¹. One evening, after hunting² in the forest all day, I was returning to my tent. It was getting dark, and I was walking along a narrow path³. On my left was a great river; on my right a dark forest. Suddenly I saw two green eyes looking at me from among the trees. A man-eating tiger⁴ was ready to jump on me. What could I do? Could I jump into the river? I kicked to the left. In the river there was a big crocodile⁵ waiting for me with his mouth open. I was so afraid that I closed my eyes. The tiger jumped. I heard it. “What has happened?” I thought. I opened my eyes. What do you think I saw? The tiger had jumped over me and was now in the crocodile's mouth. That is a true story, believe⁶ it or not!

Exercises

1 Make up 5—7 questions based on the story.

2 Retell the story and translate it into Russian.

³ along a narrow [ˈnærgəv] path [pɑ:θ] — по узкой тропинке

⁴ tiger [ˈtaɪgə] — тигр

⁵ crocodile [ˈkrɒkədail] — крокодил

⁶ to believe [bɪˈli:v] — верить

THE SPHINX¹

Have you ever seen a picture of the Sphinx? Do you know anything about the Sphinx? She was the most famous riddle-maker² in the world. Half-lion³ and half-woman she never spoke; she opened her mouth only to ask the question: "What is that animal which walks on four legs in the morning, on two in the afternoon and on three at night?" If the man could not guess the riddle, the Sphinx ate him alive.

² riddle ['rɪdl] — загадка; riddle-maker — мастер загадывать загадки

³ lion ['laɪən] — лев

One day a very clever man came her way. The Sphinx asked him the same question. She was already thinking of a fine dinner, when to her astonishment, he gave the right answer! "Man," he said, "when he is a child, he crawls¹ on hands and feet. That is the morning of his life. When he becomes a man, he walks on two feet. This is the afternoon of his life. When he is old, he walks with the help of a stick, and that is the evening of his life."

The Sphinx was so angry when her riddle was guessed that she killed herself².

Exercise

Answer the questions.

- 1) Who was the Sphinx?
- 2) How did the Sphinx look?
- 3) Where did she live?
- 4) What was the Sphinx's riddle?
- 5) What did the Sphinx do with a man if he could not guess the riddle?
- 6) Did anybody guess the riddle?
- 7) What did the man say?
- 8) Could you guess the riddle?
- 9) Why did the Sphinx kill herself?
- 10) Did you know anything about the Sphinx before?

² herself [(h)ə'self] — себя

A GREAT INVENTOR¹

When we think of telegraphy, of gramophones, of moving pictures², we must remember the great inventor Thomas Alva Edison³.

He was born⁴ in a little village in America in 1847. When he went to school, the teachers thought him stupid⁵ because he asked so many questions. The teachers were not very clever because they had to know it is not a stupid child who asks questions but a clever one who wants to learn.

So, Edison's mother took him away from school and taught him at home. He soon learned to read, and what is more important, he learned to think. One of the first things that he went in for⁶ was chemistry⁷. He made many experiments⁸ and soon knew a lot about chemistry.

Edison's parents were very poor and the boy had to work. When he was twelve, he began to sell newspapers and lived in a corner of the luggage van⁹. He kept his newspapers there. He had his little laboratory¹⁰ and library in this van. Once one of his bottles¹¹ fell on the floor, broke, and set fire to the van¹². The master of the train was so angry with Thomas, that he not only put the boy off the train, but also struck him on the head. After this Edison lost his hearing and soon became deaf¹.

Deaf, without money and help, without home, he was very unhappy. One day he saw a little boy playing right in front of a coming train. Edison ran up to the child, caught him in his arms and so saved² the little boy. The child's father was very thankful to Edison and wished to help him. He taught Edison telegraphy, and soon Edison became very good at getting and sending messages. He worked as a telegraph clerk for some years in different parts of the United States, and he spent much time in the study of chemistry and electricity³.

When he was twenty-two years old, he went to New York. He came to New York without any money, but he was a good telegraphist and was not afraid of the future. Like most inventors, Edison did not think much about money. He wished to find better ways of doing things.

Edison improved⁴ the electric lamp. He invented the machine that could "write sounds⁵". That was the first gramophone. He also made a machine that showed "moving pictures": it was a kind of box with a hole in front. When one looked into the hole and turned the wheel⁶, one could see "a film", but the film lasted only for about twenty seconds, and only one man at a time could see it. Of course, those were not the moving pictures we see all over the world today, but Edison is famous for this invention, as well as for many others.

² telegraphy [tɪ'legrəfi], gramophone ['græməfəʊn], moving pictures ['mu:vɪŋ] — телеграф, граммофон, кинематограф

Make the right choice.

- 1) Thomas Alva Edison was born
a) in England
b) in America
c) in Australia
- 2) His teachers thought him stupid because he
a) studied badly
b) did not want to learn
c) asked so many questions
- 3) His favourite subject was
a) chemistry
b) physics
c) mathematics
- 4) When he was twelve he
a) worked in a shop
b) sold newspapers
c) worked in a laboratory
- 5) The master of the train was angry with Thomas because he
a) had stolen his money
b) had struck him on the head
c) had set fire to the van
- 6) Thomas lost his hearing because
a) he had fallen ill
b) the master of the train had struck him on the head
c) he did not wash his ears
- 7) Edison worked as
a) a telegraphist
b) an electrician
c) a teacher of chemistry
- 8) Edison was the inventor of
a) an electric lamp
b) a gramophone
c) cinematograph

THE BARBER BOY'S STRIKE¹

After Mulk Raj Anand

I knew Chandu² when he was a child, and we played games together. Chandu was six months older than I, and I was sure he was a wonderful boy because he could make beautiful paper kites.

But I must say he was not so good at his lessons at school, perhaps, because his father, who was a barber, taught him early hair cutting and shaving³, so Chandu had no time for the home tasks which our schoolmaster gave us. Soon he had to leave school because his father died. My mother did not like our friendship. She said that Chandu was a barber's son and she did not allow me to play with the children of a lower caste⁴. But I liked Chandu and Chandu was kind to me.

One day I was astonished to find Chandu at the door of my house in the morning. He was dressed like a sahib⁵ and came to show me how wonderful he looked in his new clothes.

"Fine!" I said. He ran to the house of the landlord⁶ whom he shaved every morning and I went after him. There were not many people in the street at that time. Chandu looked very proud as he walked down the street dressed like a sahib. When he came to the house of the landlord, he met the landlord's little son, who shouted with joy⁷ when he saw Chandu, the barber, in a beautiful dress of a great sahib.

⁴ caste [kɑ:st] — каста (в Индии общественная группа людей, связанных происхождением, единством наследственной профессии и правовым положением)

⁵ sahib ['sɑ:(h)ɪb] — саиб (господин)

⁶ landlord — помещик

⁷ with joy — от радости

"Oh, look," shouted the landlord, "look at the son of a pig¹. Get out, get out! Put on the clothes which suit² a barber and don't let me see you in this dress again."

Chandu went out of the house. His face was red. He did not look at me. He ran to the grocer's shop³ at the corner of the street. When I came up to the shop, I saw the grocer with a stick in his hand. He shouted at Chandu:

"You little pig, why are you walking about like a clown⁴?" Why don't you stay at home and look after your old mother? Go and come back in your old clothes. Then I'll let you shave me."

Chandu was afraid. He ran away and didn't even look at me. I almost cried as I thought that he hated me now just because I was of a higher caste. Just then my mother called me and said it was time for me to eat and to go to school. She told me again that she did not like my friendship with a barber boy.

But I never stopped thinking about Chandu. And on my way back home from school I came to the poor little house where he lived with his mother. The old woman was very kind to me, and was always glad when I came to see them. Turning to me she said, "I am afraid your mother will be angry with you, and with me, too, if she knows that you are here. You had better go home." "Where is Chandu?" I asked. "I don't know," she answered. "He went to town to shave some people. I'll tell him when he comes back, that you want to see him." "All right," I said and went home.

² to suit [s(j)u:t] — подходить

³ grocer's ['grəʊsə] shop — бакалейная лавка; grocer — бакалейщик

⁴ clown [klaʊn] — клоун

When we met in the evening, Chandu said to me, "I am going to teach those people in our village a lesson. I am going on strike¹. I shall never go to their houses. I am going to buy a bicycle, I'll go to town on it every day and shave people there!" "Oh, that's wonderful," I said. Then we went to a shop and bought a bicycle. "You wait for another day or two," said Chandu, "I shall show you something that will make you laugh as you have never laughed before." "Tell me now," I said. "No, you wait. It is a thing that only a barber can know. I'll show them."

Next day I could not see Chandu because I was taken to see my aunt straight from school. But a week later he came to see me and said: "Now I shall show you the joke I told you about. Look! Do you see the men in the grocer's shop? Who is there?" I looked at the faces at the shop but I did not recognize anybody.

"Only some people sitting round and waiting for the landlord," I said. "Look again," Chandu went on. "The landlord is there. Have a look at his long white unshaved beard²." "Ha-Ha!" I laughed. "Now look at the grocer! His beard is long enough too! Now run up to the shop's window and call: 'Beavers³! Beavers!' They can't say anything to you." I did as I was told. "Beavers, beavers!" I shouted running by the shop. The people who were gathered round the shop laughed. "Catch him, catch him!" cried the grocer. "That barber boy has taught him to do so." But I got up a tree and shouted again, "Beavers, beavers!"

Soon everybody knew about the barber boy's strike. The people in the village laughed when they saw the unshaved faces of the landlord and the grocer.

That week Chandu shaved many people in town and bought new clothes for himself and presents for his mother.

Then the landlord and the grocer decided to ask the barber from the other village to shave them. They were ready to give him twice as much money as they had paid to Chandu¹. But Chandu had a new idea this time. He decided to open a shop near the bazaar² together with the other barbers near his village. He called the barbers to a meeting and said to them, "It is time for the rich people to come to our shop. We must stop dancing around them at their homes."

So the barbers opened their first shop in the village.

A GENERAL¹ IN A TRAIN

A famous general was once travelling in a crowded² train. An old woman poorly dressed, with a big basket in her hands, took the same train. She walked from one car³ to another but could not find a seat⁴, and nobody offered⁵ her one. At last she came to the place where the general was sitting. He got up at once⁶, took off his hat politely and said, "Please, madam⁷, take this seat." In a moment a lot of men offered their seats to the general, but he said, "If there was no seat for this old woman, there is no seat for me."

WILL YOU BUY IT?

A cross-eyed¹ man in a black hat rang the bell of a house. A woman opened the door and asked him, "Well, what do you want?"

"Madam, be calm²," said the cross-eyed man in a low voice.

"What for?" she asked suspiciously³.

"Madam," said the cross-eyed man, "have you a child?"

"Yes, I have," answered the woman, "what of it?"

"A little girl?" asked the cross-eyed man.

"No, a boy," answered the woman.

"Of course, a boy," repeated the cross-eyed man, "a young boy, not very old?"

"Yes," said the woman, "what about him?"

"Madam, do not be afraid," continued the cross-eyed man, "be brave and calm."

"Oh, what's the matter?" cried out the woman.

"Calm, calm," said the cross-eyed man in a kind voice.

"Did not that little boy go out to play in the morning?"

"Yes, yes," said the woman nervously⁴. "What is the matter with him?"

"Is there not a railway track⁵ crossing the next street?" asked the cross-eyed man in a grave⁶ voice.

"Yes, oh yes!" cried the woman. "Oh, tell me what has happened! What..."

"Be calm," repeated the cross-eyed man, "be brave for your child's sake⁷."

POST-HASTE¹

After C. Howard

"I say², I am glad to see you," cried the little man, standing by the letter-box. "Oh, hullo," I said, stopping.

"Simpson, isn't it?"³ I did not know him very well, because his wife and he were newcomers to our town. "Yes, that's right," answered Simpson. "Can't you lend me a penny?"⁴ You see, my wife gave me a letter to post⁵ and now I find ⁴ Can't you lend me a penny? — Не одолжите ли мне один пенни?

⁵ to post — посылать по почте

it has no stamp." "They never have," I said. "It must go today, it really must! And I don't think I shall find a post-office open at this time of night, do you?" As it was about eleven, I thought he was right.

"So I was going to get a stamp out of the machine¹," explained Simpson, "only I find I haven't got any pennies in my pockets." "I am really sorry, but I am afraid I haven't," I told him putting my hand into my pocket. "Perhaps somebody else..." "There isn't anybody else," he said. He looked up the street and I looked down. Then he looked down the street and I looked up. We both saw nobody.

"Yes, well," I was going to start, but he looked so unhappy, standing there, having a blue envelope² without a stamp in his hands, that I really could not leave him.

"You had better walk along with me to my place," I said. "It's only two streets off — and I'll try to find some pennies for you there." "It's really very good of you," said Simpson and we went.

At home we looked for pennies for a long time and at last found some. I gave them to Simpson who in the most business-like way made a note of the loan³ in his pocket-book, and left. I saw him walking along the street. Then he suddenly stopped and returned to me.

"I say, I am very sorry, but I am a newcomer here, and well, I've lost the way, you know. Perhaps, you'll explain to me how to get to the post-office." I did. I spent three minutes trying to explain to him where the post-office was. At the end of that time, I thought I was as lost as Simpson. "I'm — I'm afraid — I don't understand..." "Here, I had better come along with you," I said. "Oh, it is so kind of you," he cried out. I thought it really was. We went to the post-office and came up to a stamp machine. Simpson put a penny in it, we heard the penny passing through¹ the machine, but the stamp did not appear.

"The machine is empty²," I explained. "Oh," he looked at me. The letter fell out of his hands down on the ground. When he got it back again, it had a large dirty mark³ on it.

"Well, what can we do now?" he said in a way that showed me he could not do anything without me. Suddenly I remembered. "I know! I've got a book of stamps at home!" "Why didn't you say so before?" said Simpson almost severely⁴. And we ran home as quickly as we could.

It was difficult to find the book of stamps but at last it was found. I opened it — it was empty.

"My god!⁵" said Simpson. I saw he was going to cry. "My wife told me to post it today. I don't know that it's very important but she... Well, I'd better post it because she..." "I see," said I. (I knew Mrs. Simpson.) "Funny, I was sure the book was almost full⁶." "But what about my letter?" asked Simpson with tears⁷ in his eyes. "You'll have to post it without a stamp, that's all," I said. "Oh, could I do that?" he asked. "What else can you do? Your friend will have to pay double postage⁸ on it in the morning, but you can't do anything else." "I don't like to do that!" "But you have to. And be quick or you will be late for the last collection!" Simpson went off running. "I say, the other way!" I shouted after him. "Sorry," he cried returning. "I think I've forgotten the way again."

I did not even start to explain. I just took him by the arm and brought him to the post-office, in time for the last collection. He put his letter into the box and then, to finish off my job I took him home.

"I'm so thankful to you, really," he said to me. "I can't think what I should have done² without you. That letter — it's only an invitation to dinner to... Oh, my god!" "Well, what's the matter?" "Nothing. Just something I've remembered." "What?" But he did not tell me. He just looked at me in a strange way, said "good-bye" and went indoors³.

All the way home I thought what it was he did not tell me. But I stopped thinking of it next day, when I had to pay the postman double postage for a blue envelope with a great dirty mark on its face.

I SAW A SHIP

By Kate Greenaway

I saw a ship that sailed the sea¹,
It left me as the sun went down,
The white birds flew and followed it²
To town — to London town.

Right sad were we to stand alone³
And see it pass so far away⁴;

SIT DOWN, WON'T YOU?³

After W. Saroyan

People from all over the world⁴ come to my office⁵. My eight-year-old son comes from New York. When he comes in, he goes to my desk and sits before my typewriter⁶.

"I want to write a book," he says.

"Is that so?"

"Yes."

This is interesting, because I have never advised⁷ him to become a writer. I have always thought that a man must have his own⁸ ideas and that these ideas may be better than the ones of his father. My son has had many ideas about what he wants to do.

⁸ own [əʊn] — собственный

When once he saw dirty and strong garbage men¹ in the street, he wanted to become a garbage man. When he saw a clown² on television, he wanted to be a funny man. When he saw a man walking with a dog in the fields, he wanted to be a hunter³. When he saw a ship at sea at the cinema, he wanted to be a seaman⁴. When he saw a factory, he wanted to be an engineer; when he saw a dancer at the theatre, he wanted to be a garbage man again, but for a long time he wanted to be a test pilot⁵. "It is very dangerous⁶," he once said in a low voice.

Well, here is my son, at the typewriter at my desk in my office and he says now that he wants to write a book. He doesn't think about the matter. He goes straight to work, puts some paper in the machine and begins to type.

He gets up from the typewriter suddenly, leaving the paper in the machine. He has written his book, left it in the typewriter and forgotten all about it. He walks about the room, then comes over and takes a book on my desk. He looks at it for a long time and asks:

"What's this one?"

"Japanese."⁷

"Can you read Japanese?"

"No, but I can look at it. The book begins at the back and ends at the front."

He turns the book over in his hands. He sees a picture of myself⁸.

"Is this your book?"

"I think, he was asked by a publisher¹ to do it. He was paid to do it."

"Why did the publisher pay him to do it?"

"Because the publisher wanted to sell the book."

"Do you know the publisher?"

"No."

"Do you know anybody in Japan?"

"No."

"Well, daddy², if you don't know anybody in Japan, what's this all about³?"

"It is not necessary⁴ for people to meet the writer of a book or for the writer to meet the people who publish, translate or read the book."

"How's that?" he says, but he is busy looking at some of the little stones I have found near the sea and brought to my office, because I love stones, and he doesn't listen to me very carefully, he is just talking and I am talking too.

"Well, the book is the important thing, not the writer," I say. "It has a life of its own.⁵ Of course, the writer wrote it, but when it is written, the book has a life of its own."

He goes back to the typewriter and looks at his "book". He takes it out and gives it to me.

¹ publisher [ˈpʌblɪʃə] — издатель; to publish — издавать

² daddy [ˈdædi] — папочка

³ what's this all about — зд. как же все это получается

⁴ It is not necessary [ˈnesɪs(ə)ri] — Нет необходимости

⁵ It has a life of its own. — У нее своя собственная жизнь

"The words of the sea," he says.

I look at the paper. Seaman, Sail¹, Wind, Gull², Seal³, South-West, North-East.

"Is this book good?"

"I think it is."

"Well... I haven't put everything in it."

"You can't get everything into one book."

"Some day I'm going to be a writer too."

"Why?"

"I don't know," he says, "but I really love the sea."

We talk till my work is finished and then we get in my car and go straight to the sea, and I look at him and see how he loves it. Is he really going to be a writer? I don't know. But I know that if it happens, he will be a good one from love of the sea.

OLD MAN AT THE BRIDGE¹

After E. Hemingway

An old man in very dusty² clothes sat by the side of the road³. There was a bridge across⁴ the river and carts, trucks⁵, and men, women and children were crossing it.

¹ Действие рассказа происходит во время войны против фашистского мятежа в Испании (1936—1939 годы). Автор рассказа в это время находился в рядах борцов против фашизма.

² dusty [ˈdʌsti] — пыльный

³ by the side of the road [gəʊd] — в стороне от дороги

⁴ across [əˈkrɒs] — через

⁵ carts [kɑ:ts], trucks [ˈtrʌks] — телеги, грузовики

But the old man sat there without moving¹. He was too tired to go.

It was my business to cross the bridge and find out² where the enemy was. I did this and returned over the bridge. There were not so many carts now and very few people on foot, but the old man was still there.

“Where do you come from?” I asked him.

“From San Carlos,”³ he said and smiled. “I was taking care of⁴ animals,” he explained.

“Oh,” I said. I did not understand.

“Yes,” he said, “I stayed, you see, taking care of animals. I was the last one who left the town of San Carlos.”

He did not look like a shepherd⁵ and I looked at his black dusty clothes and his grey dusty face and said, “What animals were they?”

“Different,” he said, and shook his head. “I had to leave them. There were three kinds of animals altogether,” he explained. “There were two goats⁶ and a cat and then there were four pairs of doves⁷.”

“And you had to leave them?” I asked.

“Yes. Because of the arffillery.⁸ The captain⁹ told me to go because of the artillery.”

“And you have no family?” I asked, looking at the far end of the bridge, where a few last carts were going down the bank.

² to find out — выяснить

³ San Carlos [ˈsæŋ ˈkɑ:ləs] — Сан-Карлос (испанский городок)

⁴ I was taking care [keə] of... — Я смотрел за...

⁵ shepherd [ˈʃepəd] — пастух

⁶ goat [gəʊt] — козел

⁷ pair of doves [dʌvz] — пара голубей

⁸ Because of the artillery [ɑ:ˈtɪl(ə)rɪ]. — Из-за артиллерии.

⁹ captain [ˈkæptɪn] — капитан

"No," he said, "only the animals I've told you about. The cat, of course, will be all right, but I cannot think what will become of the others."

"What politics¹ have you?" asked I.

"I am without politics," he said. "I am seventy-six years old. I have come twelve kilometers² now and I think now I can't go."

"This is not a good place to stop," I said. "If you can make it, there are trucks up the road."

"I will wait a little," he said, "and then I will go. Where do the trucks go?"

"Towards Barcelona³," I told him.

"I know no one in that town," he said, "but thank you very much. Thank you again very much."

He looked at me very tiredly and said, "The cat will be all right, I am sure. But the others. Now, what do you think about the others?"

"Why, perhaps, they'll be all right too."

"You think so?"

"Why not," I said looking at the far end of the bridge where now there were no carts.

"But what will they do under the artillery when I was told to leave because of the artillery?"

"Did you leave the dove cage open?" I asked.

"Yes."

"Then they'll fly⁴."

"Yes, of course, they'll fly. But the others. It's better not to think about the others," he said.

"Now, if you can, get up and try to walk now," I said.

"Thank you," he said and tried to get to his feet, but sat down in the dust again.

² kilometer [ˈkɪləˈmi:tə] — километр

³ Towards [təˈwɔ:dz] Barcelona [ˈbɑ:səˈlɒvnə] — К Барселоне

⁴ to fly — улететь

"I was taking care of animals," he said again. "I was only taking care of animals."

There was nothing to do about him.¹ It was Sunday and the fascists were advancing² towards the bridge.

THE WINTER VINEYARD¹ WORKERS

After W. Saroyan

When I was fifteen, I went to work on a vineyard for thirty cents an hour². I worked with three Mexicans and one Japanese³.

The Mexicans lived in a poor little house on the vineyard. The oldest was perhaps about thirty and was called Tapia. The next oldest was perhaps twenty-five, but I have forgotten his name. He was Senor⁴ Tapia's cousin. The youngest was not much older than I, but I do not remember his name either⁵. He was the brother of Senor Tapia's wife. The house in which they all lived was very small and crowded⁶ with children. Tapia had two sons and two daughters and the second Mexican had two sons and one daughter. The third Mexican, the youngest, was looking for a wife. I will call the second Mexican José, and the youngest Pancho.

Tapia seldom⁷ spoke, but when he did, he was both heard and understood, even though⁸ he spoke very little English. I understood him and the Japanese understood him. The Japanese was a wild⁹ man. I will call him Ito, because his name was something like that, though I have forgotten what it really was.

Ito had once worked in Colorado where a storm had kept him¹ and another Japanese snowbound² in a small house for two or three days. During³ that time Ito and his friend had played cards for money⁴. Ito had lost every dollar he had. He had killed his friend with a knife and buried⁵ him in the snow. He had then left that place and travelled to California.

Ito told this story in a mixture⁶ of English, Japanese and Mexican. When he was telling this story of his thirty-year-old crime⁷, Tapia, José and Pancho listened carefully.

"Was his friend a bad man?" they asked. "No, the man was a good man, and a true friend." The workers looked and listened, and then went back to work.

The next day the workers began to work and for an hour or more nobody spoke. Suddenly Senor Tapia stopped, and everybody knew the time had come.

"Senor Ito," Tapia said.

Ito stopped and said, "Senor Tapia."

"Were you drunk⁸ perhaps?" Senor Tapia spoke in the common⁹ language of all of us. In the same language Ito said, "Well, we had had a bottle¹⁰ but we finished it the first night. I was not drunk."

Pancho, the youngest, said, "Well, why did you do it then, Senor Ito?"

"He cheated¹¹," Ito said.

² thirty cents an hour — 30 центов в час (1 цент составляет 0,01 доллара)

³ Mexican [ˈmeksɪkən] — мексиканец, Japanese [ˌdʒæpəˈniːz] — японец

⁴ Senor [seˈnjɔː] — сеньор (исп.)

⁵ either [ˈaɪðə] — зд. тоже

⁶ crowded [ˈkraʊdɪd] — зд. полон

⁷ seldom [ˈseldəm] — редко

⁸ though [ðəʊ] — хотя

⁹ wild [waɪld] — дикий

¹ a storm had kept him — буря продержала его

² snowbound [ˈsnəʊbaʊnd] — занесенный снегом

³ during [ˈdʒʊərɪŋ] — в течение

⁴ to play cards [ˈkɑːdz] for money — играть в карты на деньги

⁵ to bury [ˈberɪ] — похоронить

⁶ mixture [ˈmɪkstʃə] — смесь

⁷ crime — преступление

⁸ drunk — пьяный

⁹ common [ˈkɒmən] — общий, обыкновенный

¹⁰ we had had a bottle [ˈbɒtl] — до этого у нас была бутылка

¹¹ to cheat [tʃi:t] — плутовать, играть нечестно

"Perhaps," José said, "perhaps there was a better reason¹."

"No," Ito said, "he cheated, that's all."

"If you think about it carefully, Senor Ito," Jose said, "I am sure, you will find that there was a much better reason, even though it happened so long ago."

"I have thought about it thirty years, I'm thinking about it now," Ito said. "There was no other reason."

Now the youngest Mexican spoke.

"Well," he said, "when you went away from that place in the snow and came to California, you were a young man, weren't you²?"

"Yes," Ito said. "I was twenty-three years old."

"Did you find a Japanese girl to be your wife and the mother of your children?"

"No, Senor Pancho," Ito said.

"Why not?"

"A man who has killed another man, cannot be a father."

Again the workers went back to work, each to his own vine, and to his own thoughts.

After an hour or so I said, "Senor Tapia, if you were rich, if you had much money, what would you do³?"

"That is a very difficult question."

"What kind of a man would you be⁴?"

"Much money?"

"Yes, Senor. A million, perhaps. Perhaps, two million. What kind of a man would you be?"

"Ah," Senor Tapia said. "What kind could I be? Very bad, I am afraid, and that is the mystery⁵ of money. That s the problem of it. I never think that I shall some day have much money. I never long for¹ money."

"How about you, Senor José?"

"It is useless to long for money," Jose said. "I will never be rich. I do not understand money."

"How about you, Senor Pancho?"

The youngest Mexican smiled as he said, "Oh, I long to be rich, but I know it is useless."

"Why is it useless?"

"Money is for the rich, not for the poor," the boy said.

"What is for the poor?"

"Wife," the boy said. "Wife, and son, and daughter. If I had my wife, my son, and my daughter, I think I would be richer², than the richest man in the world."

"How about you, Senor Ito?"

"I have my money," the Japanese said. "I killed for it."

Again the workers returned to their work. After a month all the vines of that vineyard were cut. In the common language of the workers many things were said during that month, a few of them unforgettable³.

LIVERPOOL CHEESES¹

After J. Jerome

I remember a friend of mine² bought two cheeses at Liverpool. Fine cheeses they were, ripe³ and yellow, and with such a smell⁴ about them that carried three miles⁵ and could knock a man over at two hundred yards⁶.

I was at Liverpool at that time and my friend said, "What if I give you two cheeses to take them back with you to London? I shan't come home for a day or two and I don't think the cheeses can be kept much longer."

"Oh, with pleasure, dear boy," I answered, "with pleasure."

So I took the cheeses away in a cab⁷. I put them on the top⁸, we started off and went at first not very quickly, till we turned round the corner. There the wind carried a smell from the cheeses straight to our horse. With a kind of terror⁹ he rushed off at three miles an hour¹. Three men could stop him at the station only when they put a handkerchief over his nose².

⁹ with a kind of terror ['terə] — в ужасе

I bought my ticket and went proudly along the platform³ with my cheeses. The train was crowded⁴ and I had to get into a compartment⁵ where there were already seven other people. Putting my cheeses on the rack⁶, I sat down with a pleasant smile and said it was a warm day.

A few moments passed and then an old gentleman said, "Very close in here."⁷

"Yes, it is," said the man next to him.

And then they began sniffing⁸, and at the third sniff they stood up without another word and went out. Then an old lady stood up, took her bag and went out too. The other four people sat for some time till a man in the corner said something about the smell of a dead body, and the three of them tried to get out of the door at the same time and hurt themselves⁹. Now there was only one gentleman left. I smiled at the gentleman and said, "I think we are going to have the compartment to the two of us now."

He laughed pleasantly and said that some people made such a fuss¹⁰ over a little thing. But soon even he looked changed. When we got to Crewe, I asked him to come and have a drink. He said yes and we went to the buffet¹¹, where

¹ he rushed off at three miles an hour — он помчался со скоростью три мили в час

¹⁰ to make a fuss — поднимать шум

¹¹ buffet [ˈbʌfɪt] — буфет

we shouted and waited for half an hour and then a young lady came and gave us our drinks. He had his drink and went off and got into another compartment.

From Crewe I had the compartment to myself, and the whole train was crowded. As we stopped at different stations, the people seeing my compartment, would rush¹ for it.

"Here it is, Mary! come on, plenty of room²!"

"All right, Tom, we'll get in here," they would shout.

And they would run along, carrying large bags and fight round the door to get in first. And one would open the door and look in and fall back into the arms of the man behind him, and they would all come and have a sniff and then turn away and get into other compartments.

From Euston I took the cheeses down to my friend's house. When his wife came into the other room, she smelt round for a moment. Then she said, "What is it?"

I said, "It's cheeses. Tom bought them at Liverpool and asked me to bring them up with me."

And I explained that I hoped she understood it had nothing to do with me³. And she said, "I am sure of that, but I'll speak to Tom when he comes back."

My friend was kept back in Liverpool longer than he thought and three days later his wife came to see me. She said, "What did Tom say about those cheeses?"

"You must keep them in a moist⁴ place and nobody must touch⁵ them," I answered.

She said, "Nobody is going to touch them. Did he smell them?"

¹ would rush — не раз бросались (would + infinitive выражает повторяющееся действие; см. дальше: would shout — кричали; would run — бежали и т. д.)

² plenty [ˈplenti] of room — много места

³ it had nothing to do with me — я тут ни при чем

⁴ moist [mɔɪst] — влажный

⁵ to touch [tʌtʃ] — трогать

"I think, he did and he liked them very much."

"Do you think he will be angry if I give a man some money to take them away and bury¹ them?"

"I think, he will never smile again," I said.

She thought a little.

"Can you keep them for me?" she suddenly said. "I shall send them to you."

But I said I couldn't.

"Very well, then," said my friend's wife, "all I have to say is this: I shall take my children and go to a hotel² till those cheeses are eaten. I don't want to live in the same house with them."

She kept her word and left the place.

My friend came in two weeks. He said he liked a piece of cheese very much but he couldn't pay for his wife's stay in the hotel. So he decided to get rid of³ the cheeses. First he tried to throw them into the river near his house, but he had to take them out again, as the people didn't like the smell of the water. Then one dark night he took them and left them in the town cemetery⁴ but they were found there and a great fuss was made about it.

At last he got rid of them. He took them down to a sea-side⁵ town and buried them near the sea.
